Chapter 7 - The Patient

Personification is a type of figurative language that gives human characteristics to things that are not human, as in the example of saying that the clouds are crying when describing rain. In chapter 7 Ramona finds a cartoon on her bedside table that her father drew. "It showed Ramona leaning against one tree and the family car leaning against another. He had drawn her with crossed eyes and a turned-down mouth. The car's headlights were crossed and its front bumper turned down like Ramona's mouth. They both looked sick."

While Ramona is home with the flu, she discovers that television commercials do not always tell the whole truth about the products they are advertising.
